A Swiss citizen in New Zealand

I will always remember my first sight of New Zealand. My plane was landing at Auckland airport. I looked out of the window and saw green hills, blue sea and many tiny colourful houses. I was impatient to see the country but I had to wait a little. To my surprise we were not allowed to leave the plane at once. An official came onto the plane and sprayed the air. No foreign insects are allowed into New Zealand! I thought this man looked strange because he was wearing a shirt, a tie – and shorts. Later I learned that a lot of New Zealanders wear shorts in the summer even when they go to work. Then came the next surprise: dogs were waiting in the terminal to smell our luggage. They were checking if we were not carrying apples, vegetables or meat.

As I travelled by bus from the airport to the city, I saw that many cars were older models. Each house I saw had its own small garden. Most of the houses were made of wood, which I thought looked quite old-fashioned.

First I hitch-hiked to Rotorua. There I found that New Zealanders are really friendly. When I was nearly knocked over by a car, the driver, who was called Sam, stopped and apologized to me. He asked if I would like to go to a pub with him. I liked the idea and we went to his regular pub. Sam bought me a drink and, after a short time, he invited me to stay with his family. So I spent a week with Sam and his wife in their house by the lake. Sam was the first Maori that I met. Maori are the people who already lived in New Zealand before white people came. Sam's wife was a Pakeha. That is the name which is used there for white people. Although life in Sam's small town seemed like in the 1980s, I liked it. People have time to be friendly and to enjoy themselves.

After leaving Sam and his family, I travelled to the South Island to see the beautiful landscape and to go tramping. Tramping means walking in the forests or mountains. The forests are varied, with palm trees among the other trees and a lot of waterfalls. The paths are usually very dirty and narrow. For me, it was great to spend time outdoors without crowds of other people.

My last adventure was to experience life on a farm. We used to get up very early and eat a huge breakfast of fried eggs and meat chops that were swimming in fat. The whole day, we had to climb high hills to take care of the sheep. I was not very successful at looking after the animals, but I loved laughing and joking with the farmers.

I had planned to stay in New Zealand for two months and then move on to Australia. But on the farm I had met the woman who would become my wife. We went to Auckland, got married and we've been living in that town for three years now.
